DEAR DIANE

by Diane Van Arsdale

DEAR DIANE:

I'm 18 years old, and have been dating the same man for the past three years. I love him as a person, and must [illegible] as a friend. My plans on getting married in the near future. Since we've been together, I've never even looked at another guy until recently. This other person is one of my friend's best friends. I've known him ever since I started dating my boyfriend. These past years, we've been confiding best friends. They last year he (our friend) left for the Navy. Well, needless to say, I started missing him very much. Every time he comes down, the attraction between us grows more stronger. We write to one another when he isn't home, and I think that contributes to our feelings as well. We are both responsible adults, and we don't want to hurt my boyfriend and his friend. We respect one another and have decided to keep these feelings a secret and close the book on this chapter altogether. He was just down about two weeks ago, and he spent most of his time with another girl. I felt so jealous and hateful because he is not a friend, or break up the friendship. I'm not my boyfriend here. I would never jeopardize losing a friend. Please help to stop these feelings before I do hurt all of us. Thanks

TEMPTED

DEAR TEMPTED:

I think there are a number of things going on here. Obviously, I don't think you're at all ready to get married. I think that your best friendship with your boyfriend, but, perhaps, you don't love him in the "marriage" sense of the word. Because of this, and because you're not yet ready to face that reality, you've romanticized the friendship with the other man. That's fine. However, that alone should give you reason to reclose your decision to marry your boyfriend. Secondly, I don't want to hurt anyone, but, believe me you'll be hurting every one a lot worse by going through with a marriage which shouldn't happen in the first place.

I suggest you reduce things to a more casual level with your boyfriend. Go out with other people (however, not with each other man). That situation is trouble, and I don't really believe that you'll lose feeling there. It's being influenced by other factors.

DEAR DEX

by Dexter Dyer

DEAR DEX,

I've been with my girlfriend for two years, and I truly love this woman with all my heart. But lately, when we're together, we always have a good time, but sometimes I feel we're dating. But she has a tendency to drink when we're in public places with friends. She always seems to be playing games with other men, breaking them. Although she denies it, I know she truly loves me and wants me. I have always believed that if you love her so much that you'll certain things go away. Forgive her. She has asked me a few times over the past two years with other men, but I stopped to have no back afterward, and I always gave in, even though I shouldn't have. I can't take it any more and I have told her the other men don't mean anything to her. I've been patient to her and expect the same in return, especially in this day when there are so many diseases, and of course, the AIDS virus. I've not have any advice on how I can work things out with her and my friend? I would truly appreciate it.

STYMIED

DEAR STYMIED:

I think your girlfriend has some self-esteem problems. That's why she feels it necessary to flirt with other men, and then playing with them. It's my guess that when these men pay attention to her, it reaffirms some sort of confidence in herself that she's looking. If she were a secure woman in her own right, and she was comfortable with herself and her sexual image she wouldn't have the need to draw other men to her at all.

I can tell from your letter that you really genuinely care for this woman. That's why I think you should suggest she get counseling for her problems. As you've pointed out, this isn't a harmless game she's playing. It's quite dangerous, and your welfare is just as much at stake as hers.

If, for some reason, she's against pursuing counseling, you can get her to go with you. She may feel less threatened if you're with her. Good luck.

Home hints

HEART MINT — If there is an elderly, unsophisticated or young person in your home who likes to eat a lot of candy, but is concerned about their health. If so, get a container of peppermints and keep them in a dish. Tell them that they are sugar free and are good for their heart. Then watch them eat them instead of candy. Source: Heart Association

Place the hard birth near a large window where you can see it. Then watch the bird bath from inside the home. Note: If you purchase a plastic hard bath, fill the basin with water and set aside for short [illegible] stability.

Even morning hostesses could place a hard bathe in the vicinity of sitting room windows and get pleasure by both birds and residence. Georgia W. Pfaahler, S.J.

BUBA BOTTLER — The plastic bottoms on one- and two-liter soda bottles can be recycled into several useful things. After removing them from the bottles, have used them for flower pots and [illegible] bowls, and when lined with aluminum foil, they make great [illegible] Harry T. Armagost, Dale, Va

RECYCLING HINT — I thought I would send you this recycling hint. With a family of five children, I've been doing this for years. I cut out the fronts and the backs of empty cereal boxes. Then I cut each panel into three sections.

I find that these are nice for notes, grocery lists or writing a rough draft for telephone messages. Jenny V. Rae, Annville, Penn
